

Frontend login has wrong user

Posted by Philip Roy - 2008/09/03 01:30

---

Twice today I have had to login to my site from the front end. On both occasions the site has said "Hello...xxx xxx"...and in both those two times, the name it has listed wasn't me!

I found that I had to logout and log back in again to get rid of it.

I don't want to point the finger at JSecure, but at this stage I have uninstalled it to see if the issue goes away.

This was on a site running J 1.5.6

Cheers,

Phil

Hi,

I am not sure, why you are getting such strange problem, jSecure just deals with URL and not with the site objects so it is something else but surely not jSecure.

OK, thanks. Today, with JSecure uninstalled, I've not had any issues, but if they do come back I will let you know.

Sorry...just a thought...you say "deals with URL"...I don't know specifically what you mean, but could there be a conflict between sh404SEF, which is caching SEF URLs and JSecure? Just a guess.

Hi,

sh404SEF deals with Frontend URL and not Admin URLs.

The only thing jSecure does is that, it checks if user is in admin area and if he has provided proper key only then login page is displayed.

So there cannot be a conflict.

Hi,

Just to confirm...the issue I am having appears to be a caching issue being reported by others on the Joomla site, so JSecure is not to blame ;)

Sorry to bother you, but I googled this issue and found your thread. I TOO over the last couple days had this problem. A user emailed me saying that her login said Hi "wrong username") - I was skeptical, then low and behold I had been logged into the website for a long time, then went back to the page and there was another username in the top login. I am using Joomla 1.5.7 with a rockettheme template. Did you ever find out what caused this?

Not this plugin ;) I've not used the plugin for some time and the issue continues. I believe it is a caching issue in Joomla and I've therefore deactivated caching on my site. There's a discussion going on on the Joomla site....
